Medicaid Work Requirements:

Key Facts & Who They Impact

January 1 2027

Medicaid work requirements, also called community engagement requirements, begin January 1, 2027. However, some states, such as Nebraska, have started earlier.

If you must meet these requirements, you may lose your coverage if you fail to report work activities.

Stay updated at medicaid.gov.

How Many Hours Do You Have to Work?

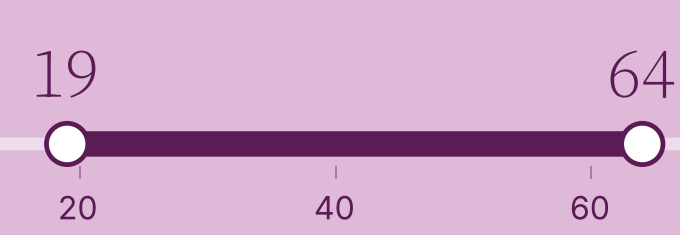

If you don't qualify for an exemption, you must either:

- Show your household income is at least $580 a month.

or

- Work at least 80 hours monthly in a qualifying activity, such as paid work or community service.

Who Do the Requirements Affect?

Adults ages 19 to 64 who receive coverage through Medicaid expansion under the ACA and certain enrollees in Medicaid waiver programs.

Common Exemptions Include:

- Caregivers of a child ages 13 or under or disability caregivers
- Diagnosis of a physical, intellectual, or developmental disability, or a mental health disorder
- Pregnancy or postpartum
- Considered medically frail
- Veterans with a total disability rating
- Short-term hardships

Note: This does not include all possible exemptions. States that didn't adopt Medicaid expansion (such as Florida and Texas) may not have Medicaid work requirements.

92%

Did You Know?

92% of Medicaid-covered adults already work or aren't working because they're diagnosed with a disability, have caregiving responsibilities, or are attending school.

Requirements and documentation rules vary by state, so Medicaid enrollees should confirm with their state Medicaid office at medicaid.gov.
